COURSE OBJECTIVES

South Africa is famously known as the ‘Rainbow Nation’.

We are home to a fascinating mix of citizens. South Africa is a melting pot of various cultures, races, languages and religions.

There are also hybrid mixtures of different cultures, and an overarching South African culture which ensures that, no matter what a person’s cultural heritage, we are, at heart, proudly South African.

Indeed, as South Africa’s democracy evolves, it is becoming a more diverse but integrated country and cultural diversity continues to be one of its strongest challenges.

This is especially true of the workplace – where we work every day is a microcosm of the country’s rich diversity.

Because of the highly diverse workforce in South Africa, organisations know that they must help employees understand, accept and capitalise on differences among people.

This course will enable employees and employers alike to respond to workplace diversity issues with openness and trust.

WHY DO WE NEED TO MANAGE DIVERSITY

We cannot assume that because the workplace is a melting pot of different cultures and languages, all people will understand each other and get along well. Our past still has the power to divide us, and to weaken us in that division.

Harmony in the Workplace

As well as the complex challenges that racial and ethnic diversity present, we also have a historic imbalance of gender equality. The workplace is still imbalanced – women are making slow progress in a male-dominated workplace.

Our rich cultural diversity also means that we have different religious beliefs. Intolerance and ignorance can lead to workplace conflict.

Imsimbi’s training course leads us all with sensitivity into these difficult areas, and helps us reach better understanding of each other.
Legal Compliance

Our historical imbalances do not always represent the demographics of our country, and our workplace imbalances have evolved at a slower pace than our democracy.

All organisations have a variety of legal and ethical compliance obligations. Imsimbi will guide you in best-practice processes to meet and, indeed, to exceed the minimum requirements that ultimately benefits all the employees, the organisation and the country as a whole.
